

THE RESEARCH UNIVERSITY CIVIC ENGAGEMENT NETWORK

EXPLORING COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT
IMPACTS AND OPPORTUNITIES

2020 MEETING / FEBRUARY 26 - 28

KU THE UNIVERSITY OF KANSAS

Dear TRUCEN Colleagues:

The annual meeting of The Research University Civic Engagement Network is a highlight of my year. A key reason for that is the people. Each year, I reconnect with valued colleagues and connect for the first time with people who will become valued colleagues. If you are a returning participant, you already know what I mean. If this is your first TRUCEN meeting, you soon will.

Beyond the extraordinary people it attracts, what makes the TRUCEN meeting distinctive is the view it affords of some of the most promising and hopeful work going on anywhere. Being at the TRUCEN meeting is a bit like looking through a periscope that enables us to see above the fray of our day-to-day work into sites of innovative and effective engagement. And that is no accident: Research universities lead the world in creativity, exploration, and discovery. Combining the catalytic qualities of community engagement with the special spirit of the research university produces novel approaches and insights. And TRUCEN is where we learn about them.

I described the work shared at TRUCEN as hopeful, and I mean that in a specific sense. Our shared political and cultural institutions are, as all of us know, increasingly under siege. The catastrophic loss of confidence in one after another of the pillars of our civil society threatens to undermine the centuries-long effort to build free institutions for a self-governing people. Higher education is, in this context, critically threatened, as work in nearly every discipline is treated as if it were mere partisan propaganda. That makes the community engagement work of research universities crucially important. This work is where the residents of our communities see higher education working with and for them. It is where fictional academic elites become real human beings working shoulder-to-shoulder with partners to improve local schools, local economies, local environments, and more.

If the United States is to experience the democratic renewal we seek, millions of Americans will need to develop confidence that ordinary people working together can create positive change. National institutions are not built to foster that confidence. University-community partnerships, on the other hand, provide people the opportunity to connect across differences to shape their communities in ways that are consistent with their values, building the musculature for democratic participation. Achieving and demonstrating impact--the central themes of this meeting--are essential to reaping the public benefits of our efforts.

I thank you for investing your time and effort in participating in the annual TRUCEN meeting. I look forward to learning with and from you.

Sincerely,

Andrew J. Seligsohn, PhD
President
